NEW NAMES FOR PACIFIC BIODIESEL

Pacific Biodiesel, Incorporated has combined with its Oregon division and will now be known as Pacific Biodiesel Technologies, LLC. “The change was primarily an administrative one”, explained Kimberly Vanderlaan, Chief Financial Officer for the companies. “Our headquarters will remain in Hawaii and current operations and staffing will be unchanged.”

The company also announced a new name for its recycling collection service, Pacific Biodiesel Logistics, LLC. Formerly Cleanway, Inc., the change, in name only, highlights the close relationship between the service that picks up the used cooking oil along with grease trap waste from food service locations and Pacific Biodiesel, who processes the waste into biodiesel.

“We were spending much of our time explaining to our customers how Cleanway’s services were related to Pacific Biodiesel”, noted Beth Mathias, Director of Sales and Marketing. “Now, with the name change, the sustainability cycle is much clearer.”

With two of its 13 plants located on Maui and Oahu, Pacific Biodiesel is recognized as a renewable energy leader by local, national and international organizations. The recipient of the 2011 Green Jobs Award, the Company has supported 85 construction jobs in the current phase of its newest venture, Big Island Biodiesel, scheduled to open in 2012.
